

: In this technique, tracer particles are introduced into the flow and illuminated by a thin laser light sheet that is pulsed to freeze particle motion. The results indicate that there exists the potential for integrating multiple fluidic subelements into aircraft components for improved performance. Using a spatial cross-correlation, the local displacement vector is obtained.