

English has frequently been compared to Latin which flourished for centuries as an international language, even after the collapse of the Roman Empire, becoming a shared resource for much of the globe. English is rapidly becoming an international lingua franca, as it becomes the essential skill of any manager with ambition. What is more, the presence of native speakers may hinder communication within a group of non-native speakers