

– Engineered nanoparticles can be delivered to contaminated sites via injection, dispersion, or immobilization in porous matrices, allowing for targeted remediation and controlled release. – Challenges include optimizing nanoparticle synthesis methods, minimizing potential toxicity to non-target organisms, and understanding the long-term fate and transport of nanoparticles in complex environmental matrices.