

We live in the age of technology. Schoolchildren in Manhattan can talk via computer to schoolchildren in Moscow, High school and college students no longer need to spend hours in the school library researching topics for term papers. A lonely invalid in Minnesota can talk with a similarly house-bound person in Mississippi. The possibilities of computerized communication are indeed unlimited.