

Landrake and Nuri bey were outside Nuri's house in Istanbul. "Tamara is the daughter of a Russian who married an English girl. Her mother was a governess and of good family. Tamara's father was afraid of the Revolution. He sent his young wife and baby girl to a country house in the Crimea. And with them he sent jewels of great value...." "Certainly," said Nuri bey comfortably. They got into Landrake's Mini car and drove away. Landrake continued the story.
