Managers are often under pressure to deliver rapid solutions to immediate problems and expect quick fixes with a quantifiable return on investment. This clashes with core OD values which emphasize long-term systemic change, deep diagnosis, and processes like participation and learning, which take time and may not have immediate measurable financial outcomes.

Summarized by © lakhasly.com