

Fair trade is an arrangement designed to help producers in developing countries achieve sustainable and equitable trade relationships. The movement focuses in particular on commodities, or products that are typically exported from developing countries to developed countries, but is also used in domestic markets. The movement seeks to promote greater equity in international trading partnerships through dialogue, transparency, and respect. Secondly, the world trade practices that currently exist promote the unequal distribution of wealth[4] between nations.