If collected properly. See, for example, the Fatality Analysis Reporting System at www-fars.nhtsa.dot.gov. From these data, the analyst can compute crash rates, look for patterns in the history of crashes at a particular location, propose solutions, and evaluate their expected effectiveness. These locally created reports eventually become part of a national database.