

you're very lucky to have such parents! Attending a university and exposing yourself to a wide range of courses is a good way to cultivate your intellect and develop yourself as a person. Highly educated and cultivated individuals throughout the world share a common denominator of broad knowledge and scholarship. Living in a dormitory is itself a lesson in life a lesson where you learn how to forge ties of friendship and build lasting human relationships. At any rate, the question of where you study at a vocational school, a two-year college or a four-year university is something only you can decide based on many factors, including your family circumstances, academic ability and personal desires. The higher you climb, the broader your field of vision and the wider the world unfolds before you. It's like climbing a mountain.