

Half-life is the time it takes for half of the radioactive nuclei in a sample to decay into stable nuclei. It's crucial in understanding the rate of decay and the stability of radioactive materials.