

This study highlights the critical necessity for professional development programs aimed at assisting teachers in adapting to the swift integration of new technology in education. Dr. Kathleen P. King, the study's author, brings extensive expertise to the intersection of adult education and technology integration. Analyzing the experiences of 175 teachers undergoing technology education reveals significant shifts in their professional perspectives, providing vital guidance for enhancing technology education professional development initiatives.