

The second kind of food–place category includes foods that may have originated with a traditional recipe in a particular place, but which over time have become generic food products.