

The researchers have opted for a structured development approach using the plan-driven waterfall model. This method follows a sequential order, where each stage – requirements analysis, design, development, testing, and deployment – is meticulously completed before moving on to the next.