

Biofilms are aggregates of one or more species of microbes, adhered to a surface, which work together to survive. This sugary secretion, made of polysaccharides, proteins, lipids and DNA, Removing biofilm is extremely important because, if left untreated, it leads to further oral health issues such as an oral cavity, gum disease, or periodontal disease, which can then lead to overall health problems.