

Tiny chips embedded in most anything contain electronically stored information that can be read using an RFID reader located several yards away.