

.Sustainable development (SD) is a popular model in development, as it has become a widely used term among international aid agencies, development planners, and a topic for conferences and academic research, in addition to being a slogan for activists in the fields of development and the environment.