

So much hydrochloric acid is secreted by the gastric glands that the stomach routinely has a pH of about 2.0. As with the rest of the digestive tract, a thick layer of mucus protects the wall of the stomach from enzymatic action.