

Perceived professional barriers were negatively related to feelings of coping efficacy and positively related to counterproductive coping strategies. Implications for future research and counseling for minority groups are discussed.