

Slow sand filters are the original type of sand filters and have a successful history going back to the early years of the nineteenth century. They work without coagulants and are often found on reservoir- or lake-derived supplies.