

ship strikes an iceberg and ten passengers crowd into a lifeboat that is only intended to hold nine. The captain considers his choices and decides to force the weakest individual out of the lifeboat. This way only one person drowns, and this person would have drowned anyway. Others on the lifeboat feel that this choice is morally wrong.