Biodiversity is a critical topic for decision-makers in cities primarily for two reasons.Second, cities are crucial players in conservation because they are often located in ecologically significant areas and the socio-economic forces originating in cities drive much of the biodiversity loss both regionally and across the globe.First, cities stand to gain from conserving biodiversity because healthy ecosystems can contribute to the well-being of urban residents.

Summarized by © lakhasly.com