

One of the most important problems affecting soil is soil pollution. Soil pollution is defined as the entry of foreign substances into the soil or an increase in the concentration of one of its natural components, which leads to a change in the chemical and physical composition of the soil. These substances are called soil pollutants and may be pesticides, chemical fertilizers, acid rain, or waste (industrial – household – radioactive and others)