

Reflection: Some of the incident radiation bounces off the surface of the material. Transparent materials (like glass or air) allow radiation to transmit through. Examples include light reflecting off a mirror or sunlight bouncing off water. Absorption: The material absorbs some or all of the incoming radiation. Different materials have varying absorption properties.