

When water or other liquids become warm enough, they change into a gas. Evaporation happens all around us without us noticing it much, like a puddle drying up or washing getting dry. When particles on the surface of a liquid change into a gas, we say the liquid evaporates. Water changes into a gas called water vapour.