

States show significant variation in their use of private correctional facilities. Among the immigrant detention population, 26,249 people – 73% of the detained population – were confined in privately run facilities in 2017. For example, New Mexico incarcerates over 40% of its prison population in private facilities, while 23 states do not employ any for-profit prisons. The private immigrant population grew 442% since 2002.
