

Many people believe college is just a continuation of high school. While books supplement learning, their lectures are full of interactive materials, illustrations, personal experience, and their own expertise in the subject. Examine the similarities and differences of college vs. high school by looking at the structure, teaching style, and grading. Furthermore, using the textbooks and standardized rubrics from the state, high school students receive grades based on what they comprehend of the material. Students spend about 6 hours a day or 30 hours a week learning various subjects in structured time increments. However, the two have distinct differences that can't be ignored when you walk onto a college campus. To make sure everyone attends, buses usher them to school. Additionally, teachers use a lecture style with textbooks and notes on a chalkboard. In addition, when it comes to teaching styles, college professors aren't going to go by the book. Lastly, professors expect students to apply their knowledge, so when it comes to grading, it is more based on a student's ability to apply this knowledge to unique situations. And, it isn't just that newfound freedom. Most of the time, the lecture follows the textbook. The structure, teaching
