

The kidneys are reduced to as little as one fifth their normal size (consisting largely of fibrous tissue). The resulting severe glomerular damage can progress to stage 5 CKD and require a renal replacement therapy. Numerous glomeruli and their tubules become scarred, and the branches of the renal artery are thickened.