

Standard Precautions Standard precautions are used by health care workers during client care when contact or potential contact with blood or body fluids may occur. These precautions reduce the risk of exposure for the health care worker and protect patients from potential transmission of 1 infectious organisms.