

Emailers send messages through email, often for formal or longer communications, including attachments. Texting, typically done on phones, is for shorter, casual conversations with friends and family. Emails can be accessed on computers and phones, while texting is primarily on phones. Both forms of communication exist, with emails seen as more professional and texts as more instant and casual.