

NMR spectroscopy plays a pivotal role in the drug discovery and development process. NMR screening experiments are very efficient and versatile in discovering high-affinity ligands for biologically relevant macromolecules, elucidating ligand-binding sites, identifying small molecules with wide ranges of binding affinity and thus proving to be a valuable and robust tool in the structure-based drug design.