Lalla Fatma N'Soumer (c. 1830–1863) (Kabyle: Lalla Fadman Sumer; Arabic: ????Her ashes were transferred in 29 October 1994 from the cemetery of Sidi Abdellah, near the zawiya Boumaali in Tourtatine, to Martyrs Square at the El Alla Cemetery in Algiers for notable national figures.[1] Lalla Fatma's life has been documented in the movie Fadhma N'Soumer [fr], directed by Belkacem Hadjadj and released in 2014.Name Lalla, the female equivalent of the Berber word mass, is an honorific reserved for women of high social rank or for holy women.[2] "N'Soumer" means "of Soumer", where Soumer was the village nearest the zawiya of her lineage, the Sidahmed. She also sometimes bore the name "Lalla N'Ouerdja".The lead role of Fatma N'Soumer was played by French actress Laetitia Eido.[16][17] In Algeria, a few statues of Laila Fatma are in display, and a few schools and streets bear her name, notably a mixed-gender high school in Tablat, the city she died in.was an Algerian anti-colonial leader[1] during 1849–1857 of the French conquest of Algeria and subsequent Pacification of Algeria.She led several battles against the French forces, until her capture in July 1857.She was imprisoned until her death six years later.She is an Algerian national hero.?????????

Summarized by © lakhasly.com