

Livestock is an integral part of the agrarian economy in most parts of the world, providing quality animal protein and thus contributing to human food and nutrition security.