

Individual consumers or households are usually thought of as being buyers, while firms (or businesses) are associated with supply.