

The global labor market has undergone a major transformation thanks to rapid advancements in digital technology. This report examines how digitalization is impacting employment structures, skills requirements, and overall job quality, drawing on academic research and real-world examples.